David Allan Coe quits stage after being hit by beer bottle

David Allan Coe fans were disappointed when the famed "outlaw country music" singer cut short a heralded concert at an area club after singing only a few songs Saturday night.

Coe abruptly ended the concert when a beer bottle struck him from the audience at the War Bama Club in Choctaw County west of Coffeeville.

Coe had played for about 18 minutes and was in the middle of his fifth song,

"How Do You Like Me Now," when he was hit. Coe, 71, finished the song, thanked the crowd, and got up and left the stage, got into a Ford Explorer that he was traveling in, and left.

Fans were disappointed but so was Chris Sherman, owner of the War Bama Club who had worked hard to bring Coe in and had seven security people on the floor of the club.

Legislators facing tough decisions in regular session

By Jennifer Harrison
Special to The Democrat

Local legislators expect to tackle some of Alabama's biggest budget problems ever, which might increase the number of students per teacher and cause other service cuts, as they gathered in Montgomery Tuesday to begin the 2011 regular legislative session.

"Overall, we expect this year to be the worst budget year in our state's history," said Sen. Marc Keahey, D-Grove Hill. "It's going to be a struggle in Montgomery to make sure the state budgets are not balanced on the backs of one class of people more so than another."

Democratic Rep. Elaine Beech of Chatom said she is also concerned about the state's budget. "We don't really know what we're going to see when we get there," she said. "The Alabama Legislative Fiscal Office has already told us we will have to cut the budgets to operate."

The Legislative Fiscal Office and the governor's finance director held budget hearings on Feb. 8 and announced that the state's general fund was below predictions and that budget cuts were imminent.

Where did 2,034 folks go?

Clarke County's population, along with that of 29 of Alabama's 67 counties—almost half—declined from 2000 to 2010, according to U.S. Census figures released last week.

Overall, though, Alabama's population grew by 7.5 percent to 4,779,736. The state remains the 23rd most populated state in the nation.

Clarke County's population dropped 2,034 or 7.3 percent to 25,833. The county ranks 42nd out of the 67 counties.

Grove Hill was the only county incorporated municipality that showed a gain—1,570 residents as compared to 1,438 in 2000.

Losing population were Jackson, 5,228 from 5,419; Thomasville, 4,209 from 4,649; Fulton, 272 from 308; and Coffeeville, the least loss of all at eight, 352 from 360.

Clarke's neighbors, as well as other rural counties to the north through what is traditionally known as the Black Belt, lost population also.

Choctaw County's population is 13,859. The county lost 2,063, or 13 percent of its population since 2000. Wilcox County declined 11.5 percent, or 1,513, to 11,670.

Marengo County's population is 21,067, a decline of 6.7 percent.

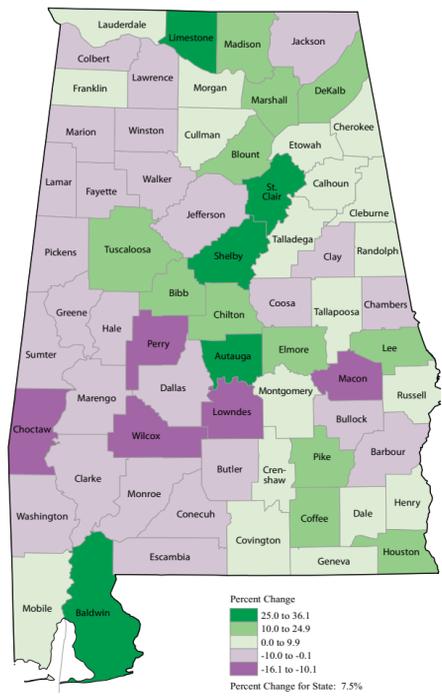

Monroe County lost 5.2 percent, or 1,256, to 23,068.

Washington County lost the least in the region, 516 citizens or 2.9 percent for a 2010 population of 17,581.

The largest loss was in Lowndes County, a 16.1 percent dip. The largest gains were in Shelby County, 36.1 percent; and Baldwin County, 29.8 percent.

Alabama's overall population did not change enough to alter its seven congressional districts but the shifting population will certainly affect the districts' makeup and could affect Clarke's representation.

Clarke County is split between the First and Seventh districts. The First District, represented by Jo Bonner, R-Mobile, grew by eight percent while the Seventh, represented by first term Congresswoman Terri Sewell, D-Birmingham, lost 5.3 percent.

Dark purples indicate most population losses followed by light purples. The light color indicates minor changes while the darker greens indicate significant population gains.

Morgan named new district judge

Finney keeps coroner's job

Gov. Robert Bentley didn't delay in naming a replacement for retiring Clarke County District Judge Bill Kimbrough.

J. R. Morgan, an assistant district attorney who had applied for the appointment, said the governor's office called him late Friday to tell him he had been appointed.

Kimbrough's 16-year tenure ended Feb. 28 and Morgan assumed the duties March 1.

A formal swearing-in will be held at the courthouse Friday at 3:30 p.m.

Finney keeps coroner's job

Also, Gov. Bentley has appointed Mitch Finney as Clarke County coroner. Finney was elected in November but did not file his bond and had to forfeit the office as the law requires.

He was appointed to the position Feb. 22.

Judgment against ex-Judge DuBose overturned

A $1.2 million judgment against ousted Circuit Judge Stuart DuBose has been overturned by the Alabama Supreme Court, it was announced Friday.

The Supreme Court ruled that the case, which originated in Washington County Probate Court, was incorrectly transferred to Circuit Court. Consequently, the Circuit Court had no legal jurisdiction to hear the matter, the Supreme Court said.

The case dates to 2003. See DUBOSE, Page 10A

corted out by War Bama security and turned over to Choctaw County Sheriff Tom Abate. He was charged with second degree assault and taken to the Clarke County Jail because the Choctaw jail is shut down. His bond was set at $5,000.

Further complicating the story is that the Explorer reportedly struck a deer somewhere between the club and the Waynesboro, Miss. hospital where Coe was headed.

Sherman said Tuesday he had heard from Coe's manager who said Coe did suffer a cut to the forehead.

There were differences of opinion from spectators as to where the beer bottle hit Coe and if the injury was as serious as indicated. Some also said that Pierce threw the bottle but didn't mean for it to hit Coe.

Some spectators suggested that the incident was an excuse for Coe to end the show early and leave.

Sherman said Tuesday, I would like to offer an apology on behalf of the War Bama staff to everyone who purchased tickets Saturday night. It was deeply disappointing to everyone that David Allan Coe's set had to be cut short due to the actions of one person. I did appreciate the fact that almost everyone seemed to understand and still stuck around to hear the band Strangebrew and had a great time despite the fact that Coe had left. It was an unfortunate act but I want everyone to know that steps are in place to assure it never happens again including from here on out serving all drinks in plastic cups.

"It saddens me that so much work, effort and money were put into bringing a national act such as David Allan Coe to our area and one bad apple spoiled it."

Coe's band had arrived via bus earlier in the day with Coe showing up just prior to show time.

Coe came in without fanfare or comment, sat down and started playing. He sang several songs, without talking in between, before the incident.

Coe, with flowing long hair and covered with tattoos, has always cultivated an "outlaw" image. He's been in reform schools, correctional centers and prisons and some of his publicity information says he served time for murder.

He's recorded 26 albums during his 40 plus years in the business and became a big star in the '70s and '80s.

Coe's hits include "Mona Lisa Lost Her Smile," "The Ride," "Long Haired Redneck" and "You Never Even Called Me By My Name." Two of his best-known compositions were "Take This Job And Shove It," made famous by Johnny Paycheck and "Would You Lay With Me In A Field of Stone" by Tanya Tucker.

Even though in his 70s, he still makes more than 200 appearances a year.

Sherman has been trying to book name singers at the War Bama recently. Ashton Shepherd played the War Bama New Year's Eve and Brantley Gilbert was there last month.

Sherman said, "I hope everyone still has faith in us. We will continue to bring you top-notch acts beginning with Colt Ford, Friday, March 18. David Allan Coe is OK and his management and I are working toward a solution for the fans that attended Saturday night."

Legislature

"All you can hear from leadership is cuts, cuts, cuts!" said Democratic Rep. Thomas Jackson of Thomasville. "In the process, a lot of people are going to be hurt."

Sen. Hank Sanders, D-Selma, said the General Fund will need $700 million "to provide the same level of service that we have right now." He was referring to the fiscal year that will start in October and run to September of next year.

It isn't just the General Fund that local legislators are concerned about.

According to Sanders, the Education Trust Fund has lost $1.5 billion since 2008, and any cuts to the education system would be detrimental.

"Anything that you could cut from has already been cut," he said. "So you've cut out the flesh and the muscle, and now you're down to the bone."

Beech said that education cuts could lead to a loss of teacher units, meaning more students per teacher, and that students could be spending less time in school.

"There was a mention of cutting days in a school year, and that some programs may not be funded at all," she said. "These were only suggestions, and no definite decisions will be made until the session begins."

Jackson said: "You're going to have 50 to 60 kids per class, and that's going to be chaos. I see that coming."

Despite the statewide budget crisis, Keahey said he feels Alabama will overcome the economic slump.

"Over the past 130 years, Alabama has managed and passed budgets that fund state services while remaining one of, if not the lowest, tax states," he said. "That's something I and everyone in the state takes pride in. That's something I hope to continue."

Sanders also expressed optimism about the upcoming session.

"I'm an optimistic person, so I think we'll take what we have and make what we need and do the best we can," he said. "Just getting a budget is a positive thing because you

Riding from one capital to another

The "Capital to Capital" Trail Ride passed through Grove Hill Monday on its way from St. Stephens to Montgomery for the Southeastern Livestock Exposition Rodeo on March 10. The ride, to benefit Washington County's Relay for Life, started Saturday with participants camping in Jackson Saturday night, at Ray Clarke's in Helwstern Sunday night and at the Horse Arena in Thomasville Monday night. The horses and wagons average about 20 miles a day. St. Stephens was the territorial capital of Alabama, hence the name of the can't operate without one."

Beech, now a member of the minority party, said she hopes legislators can, as citizens, put aside party differences and work for those they represent.

"If we all can remember who elected us and do what is right, we will fare fine as lawmakers," Beech said. "We will not always agree, but we should be able to compromise for the overall good of Alabama."

Jackson said this is a crucial time for Alabamians, and citizens should stay informed.

"These decisions could have devastating effects on all of us if we don't get involved," he said. "If we sit back and allow the Republicans to tax organized labor the way they are in the state, we will no longer be a democratic republic, but a utilitarian state run by aristocrats. We will lose this form of government as we know it."

Troy University journalism student Jennifer Harrison of Mobile wrote this story as part of a project partly funded by the Alabama Press Association Journalism Foundation.

DuBose

when DuBose was still a practicing Jackson attorney. It concerns the estate of Joseph J. Sullivan, an elderly Washington County man who died and left everything he owned to his caretaker, Cheryl Weaver.

Weaver had hired DuBose shortly before Sullivan's death to prepare a will for the man. DuBose wrote the will without ever meeting Sullivan and agreed to administer the estate with Weaver.

A legal battle ensued with Sullivan's heirs unsuccessfully contesting the will and then DuBose and Weaver getting into a dispute over the estate.

Weaver ended up firing DuBose and complained of his 40 percent legal fee.

In 2007, after DuBose was elected circuit judge in 2006, Mobile County Circuit Judge John Lockett ruled that DuBose and the state were responsible for paying Weaver $1.2 million plus 600 acres that Sullivan had owned.

The case plagued DuBose's short lived judicial career. He was sanctioned by the Alabama State Bar for writing a will for a man he never met shortly after he took office.

In 2008, following a number of incidents, the Alabama Judicial Inquiry Commission leveled charges of ethics violations and the Alabama Court of the Judiciary removed him from the bench in a trial in which DuBose was absent because he was in jail on federal charges of possessing firearms in violation of a restraining order issued in his divorce and for lying about it on a gun purchasing form.

He was sentenced to 18 months in federal prison on the firearm charge but was released in late 2009.

It appears that the case will have to start over with the probate of Sullivan's will in Washington County Probate Court.
